North Dakota Fishing Hall of Fame to induct one new member

The North Dakota Fishing Hall of Fame Board of Directors is pleased to announce the upcoming induction of Robert "Bob" Meter of Bismarck to the Hall of Fame. The induction ceremony will occur in Garrison on July 18th at the City Auditorium. The induction will be conducted prior to the rules meeting for the Governor's Cup Walleye Derby.

The mission of the North Dakota Fishing Hall of Fame is to conduct and maintain a program to recognize and honor those persons, organizations, or institutions that have made significant and lasting contributions to sportfishing in North Dakota. This year's inductee has made significant contributions that makes him well qualified for induction into the Hall of Fame.

Robert "Bob" Meter

Bob Meter is the inventor of a variety of fishing tackle items, but he is best known for the Meter Bottom Bouncer which vaulted walleye fishing in the Dakotas and ultimately the rest of the walleye waters across the country into a new angling technique. Invented by Bob in 1964, the bottom bouncer is used in conjunction with a spinner or plain hook rig, allowing anglers to drift or troll the rig on the bottom, while remaining relatively snag free. The Bottom Bouncer proved to be a classic, and has allowed untold numbers of anglers to successfully catch walleyes and other species on reservoirs, lakes, and rivers.

Bob was a founding father of the Bis-Man Reel & Rec club which was organized in 1979. He also originated the Take-a-Kid Fishing Program for the club. Bob was a tireless volunteer for a variety of fishing events, especially those involving boat and water safety or youth-related seminars and events. He was an avid angler and tournament fisherman. In addition to his bottom bouncer, other tackle he invented and marketed allowed him to place high in a number of walleye tournaments, including the North Dakota Governor's Walleye Cup.

Bob's tackle inventions have been invaluable to sport-fishing in North Dakota. He also displayed an unselfish dedication to help and educate others, positively promote sport-fishing, and volunteer his time and talents.

The North Dakota Fishing Hall of Fame is located at North Country Marine & Motorsports in Garrison, North Dakota. In addition to a display of all members of the Hall of Fame, there is a display of fishing artifacts. Past inductees to the Hall of Fame are:

Catch the Feeling

BY NICK SIMONSON
Dakota Edge Outdoors

Summer fishing success often depends on finding those locations where walleyes are feeding, cruising and schooling. Detecting those prime pieces of underwater real estate comes down to a matter of feel, and keeping contact with the bottom is a great way to detect those transition areas from sand or mud to gravel or larger rocks, which provide cover and edge habitat for Ol' Marbleeyes. Utilizing a bottom bouncer and any number of related lures pulled behind it will help provide vital clues and a way of connecting with fish once key transition areas are identified.

The leg of a bottom bouncer does more than just prop a spinner or slow death rig up and prevent it from snagging in structure, it can also be used to feel out the bottom as it is pulled along behind the boat. A steady pull signifies a consistent bottom, like mud, clay, sand or sometimes flat rock. A tick-tick-tick usually suggests gravel or other small-rock substrates. A larger jump or pull on the rod tip will signal the wire bouncing off a bigger rock or boulder. Putting the pattern together, anytime a bottom bouncer slips from a smooth surface to a more broken one, a key transition area is identified and is worth noting on a lake map or a GPS – especially if a bite follows.

Utilize low-stretch superline like PowerPro, Fireline or the like on a sensitive graphite rod to get a more sensitive connection to the specialized sinker. Hold the rod in hand to get a feel as to what things are like below as the information telegraphs up the line and compare what's detected by touch with what can be seen on a sonar screen. Where more than one rod is an option, have a second bottom bouncer rig on a reel loaded with monofilament and set in a nearby rod holder. While the more sensitive (and less stretchy) superline can be used to detect changes and bites can be handled with a drop-sweep hookset by hand, the rod rigged with monofilament can play a little bit and load up against the weight of a fish if it bites. Just remember to frequently check the rig in the rod holder while trolling along.

Not unlike pheasants, deer or other wildlife, walleyes utilize edges for feeding, travel and, if needed, a quick escape to cover, such as a deeper stretch nearby or a rockier area that provides more concealment. As prey items such as perch or other small panfish often utilize the same edges, these areas are worth noting and fishing with more rigor once they are detected. Finding spots in both deep and shallow water and adjusting presentations based on weather conditions or daylight is an effective way of being able to move between prime areas during low light and daytime hours. By running spinners or other similar trolling rigs on a bottom bouncer, the rig provides a two-in-one seek-and-connect combination for walleyes in any stretch where a transition area occurs.

Beyond the obvious purpose of presenting a bait in the strike zone to summer walleyes, bottom bouncers, when partnered with sensitive no-stretch line and a good rod, can explain a lot about why fish are relating to a certain area in a body of water. Utilize them to get a feel for those prime places that walleyes use this time of year to recover from the spawn and feed straight into fall. Wherever the changes are detected in the substrate below, it is likely that fish will follow. Be ready for the bite and make it a point to mark those places for great fishing all season long.

BY TYSON SMEDSTAD

Youth anglers will get a peek at what it's like to participate in North Dakota's largest Fishing tournament with the Junior Governor's Cup Derby.
